

From: Curtis Allumbaugh [REDACTED]
Date: Wed, Jul 21, 2010 at 1:55 AM
To: [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

honestly, I am completely offended and pissed off by your email. I think you're acting like a busy body with no place in this matter. I have made it clear in previous emails that there are plenty of non alcoholic options for people and that it is an event for people to get to know each other prior to the start of orientation so that the awkwardness of those orientation games and getting to know everyone activities won't exist. Obviously there is a mention of alcohol because over 60 people have responded requesting it if you have checked the google doc. There are people who listed that they would not be drinking which is awesome. They're still going to have an awesome time. Perhaps you also failed to notice the column that I designated for ride sharing and arrangements for people to split taxis. I have had several students respond in personal emails stating that they will be arranging taxis and asking my address before I sent it out in the last email. I don't intend to let anybody leave who is driving and noticeably impaired. Ultimately though, it comes down to the judgement that others have as adults. We aren't babies to be coddled and people should be behaving responsibly at this point in their lives realizing that their future lies ahead. I really don't care if staff sees these emails. It has nothing to do with official school activities, drinking is left as a personal (and obviously popular) decision, there are plenty of other official activities, and you really have no place in this. You should really just mind your own business and let our class be.

Curtis